Prior to initiating the first Five Year Plan, the cities of Bucharest, Timisoara and Iasi were declared "open" cities. All persons not working (including pensioners) are obliged on short notice to leave the city and to establish themselves in other localities, principally within the villages. In November 1950, in order to control the population which has the right to sojourn within the "open" cities, a special stamp was added to the new identification cards. Generally, the civilians who left the cities had to establish themselves within the locality fixed by the authorities. This move was supervised by the transport officials.
